

Business model

This is a proposal for a later paid board. Nothing here is on sale today. The desk does not take payments, and it does not send bets. The member counts and the remaining-income figure below are arithmetic from the tier prices. They are not a forecast and not a guarantee.

The product is not a sportsbook. The reader still types any ticket into their own FanDuel account. Marketing talks about the record and the tools. It does not promise winnings.

Tiers

Pro at $19.99 a month is the main subscription. An annual Pro membership would be $199.99, which is $39.89 less than twelve months at $19.99.

Tier	Price	What it would include
Free	$0	One featured pick, a short note on that pick, and a preview of Build a bet. The graded record stays visible.
Rookie	$9.99/month	The daily featured pick, the weekly picks, basic notes on the matchup, and limited use of Build a bet.
Pro	$19.99/month	Every daily and weekly pick, picks across the sports on the board, the odds and the estimated chance on each leg, the full Build a bet tool, suggested parlays, and a plain risk note on the ticket.
VIP	$34.99/month	Everything in Pro, more ways to shape a parlay, the full win and loss history, and early access to a new card.

The chance on a card is FanDuel's price turned into a percent. The desk does not have a separate prediction model. A VIP line for "model insights" waits until that model exists. Until then, VIP is the wider tool set and the full record, not a claim of a better forecast.

Estimated revenue at 100 paying subscribers

The mix used here is 20% Rookie, 60% Pro, and 20% VIP. Everyone pays the posted price and stays subscribed. That is the assumption, not a prediction.

Tier	Subscribers	Monthly price	Monthly revenue
Rookie	20	$9.99	$199.80
Pro	60	$19.99	$1,199.40

Tier	Subscribers	Monthly price	Monthly revenue
VIP	20	$34.99	$699.80
Total	100		$2,099.00

A year of that same mix, with no one leaving, is $$2,099 \times 12 = $25,188$ gross.

The same mix at larger counts:

Paying subscribers	About this much a month
100	$2,099
250	$5,248
500	$10,495
1,000	$20,990

These are gross subscription receipts. They are not profit, and they are not guaranteed earnings.

Estimated monthly remainder at 100 subscribers

This is one example budget, not a quote from a vendor.

Line	Amount
Gross subscription revenue	$2,099
Payment processing	—$63
AI, hosting, and data	—$200
Marketing and other operating costs	—$150
Left before taxes	$1,686

$63 is about 3% of $2,099. The $1,686 is what would be left in this example before taxes. It does not include labor, a lawyer, accounting, refunds, or anyone’s pay. Real costs depend on the card processor, the data sources, the models, the ads, and how many people cancel.

The first goal is 100 paying subscribers, about $2,100 a month before expenses. The next goal is 500, about $10,500 a month before expenses.

Earlier notes used one flat price, $19.99 or $20. This plan keeps $19.99 as Pro and adds Rookie, VIP, a free preview, and the annual Pro price.

What has to be true first

The graded record as of October 9, 2026 is 83 wins and 219 losses, 27.5% of decided tickets, with 118 still open. The page has to keep showing that record, including the losses. A subscription sold on “consistent value” or “reliable profit” would describe a result this board has not produced.

No one should be charged until:

- the record stays visible next to the picks
- the states where the site will be offered have been checked

- age is limited to 21+
- refund terms are written down
- upfront cash spent to launch is written down as it is spent

How a later split was requested

Brian Hannan's request is that cash he puts in to get the desk running is paid back from revenue before anyone splits what remains, and that what remains after that payback is split 50/50.

That payback is a business term between adults. It is not in force. The points for a lawyer are written in the draft agreement: Brian is repaid documented launch cash first, repayment comes from revenue not from a promise of profit, and only after that repayment is net money split evenly. Both people who sign have to be 21 or older. A 50/50, a marketing role, or a payment from this project is not available to anyone under 21.

What a small edge looks like

A single $1 bet at -110 wins $0.91 and loses $1.00. It has to win 52.4% of the time to break even. That line is for one side of one price. The parlays on this board are a different bet, and their graded rate is 27.5%.

Win rate on $1 bets at -110	Expected on 100 bets
50.0%	−$4.55
52.4%	$0
54.0%	+$3.09
55.0%	+$5.00
57.0%	+$8.82

Two $1 bets a week at a 54% win rate expect about 6 cents a week. That is the shape of a small edge on a $20 bank. It is not a plan to turn $20 into serious money on a season of $1 bets. A hedge at -110 against -110 locks about a 9 cent loss on $1 a side, because both prices include the vig.

Before anyone is charged

Form an LLC, get an EIN, and open a business bank account. Business money stays separate from personal money. Sell the board. The company does not take the bet. Keep every pick: the odds, the date, the legs, and the result, including losses.

A lawyer who knows Tennessee gambling rules and online subscriptions reads the site, the ads, and any affiliate deal before the first charge. Sportsbook affiliate links wait for that review. The order of work is the paper record, the lawyer, the company papers, HTTPS, the 21+ check, an honest application to a processor, and only then a charge to adults.
